There is a Post-Ride Festival to follow, which will include great music, food, and beer and wine vendors.
- OPTION 2: ON YOUR OWN. The second option is to follow your own individual, self-directed physical activity plan on your own. You can walk, hike, run, bike, swim or do any kind of physical activity of your choice on your own time.

THOUGHT OF THE DAY

“There are two tax systems in America—one for the informed and one for the uninformed. Both systems are legal. Everyone does it, rich and poor alike, for nobody owes a duty to pay more than the law demands.”

—Judge Learned Hand

The family business, in the best of times, faces unique challenges particularly with business succession and estate planning. The family business often represents the lion's share of the family's wealth, but some family members may not actively participate in the operation of the family business. Business ownership which includes active business owners along with passive, non-active owners, is fraught with peril and the potential for dispute and even failure.

Moreover, the family business is often not merely a business, but a lifestyle. The hard work, long hours, and heightened risk can be common challenges. The family business owner's very identity is more likely to be tied to the success, or failure, of the family business.

This is particularly evident for agricultural or farm businesses. The family farm is connected to the land which is critical to success. Here in California... READ ON

RECIPE OF THE MONTH: Even the Word “Impossible” Means “I’m Possible” – A Short Story of Mrs. Fields Cookies

Did you know that August 4th is National Chocolate Chip Cookie Day? 🍪

In honor of this day, we have provided you a short story about Mrs. Fields Cookies and also a copycat recipe that is easy to make.

Debbie Fields turned a cookie recipe into a $450 million dollar company or perhaps empire. Growing up, her father made about $15,000 per year as a welder while her mother remained at home raising five (5) children. Debbie said she was raised in an extremely wealthy family as her father taught her that true wealth is found in family, friends, and doing what you love.

As a young girl with four (4) siblings, her favorite food was homemade cookies.

She would bake her own using imitation chocolate and margarine because that's all her family could afford. At age 13, she worked in a department store. She spent her first paycheck on real chocolate, vanilla, and butter.

As a young housewife, years later, she and her first husband had dinner in a beautiful, yet intimidating home of one of her husband's clients. He asked – what do you do? Mrs. Fields replied that she was “trying to get orientated.” He immediately got up, put an “enormous, leather bound dictionary” on her lap saying, “The word is oriented. If you can't speak the English language, you should not speak at all.” She vowed at that time to “become somebody.” Following her father's advice to do what you love, she decided to make and sell gourmet cookies.

Mrs. Fields did not just create a successful business, she created a market for expensive, high end cookies that did not previously exist. Her family, friends, and advisors all believed that she would fail. When she opened her first store, her first husband bet her that she would not have even $50 in sales the first day. While Mrs. Fields was pursuing her dream, her first husband was almost certainly calculating the write-off or tax savings from the loss.

Mrs. Fields sold $75 in cookies that first day. She took to the streets, letting people try the product. She proved that her cookies were so delicious that the cookies sold themselves once people were provided a taste.

She structured her business to have immediate feedback so that she could quickly see if she was failing. She calculated her breakeven per month, then per day and finally per hour.

The rest is history. Mrs. Fields created a market that did not previously exist. All the experts and even her husband did not believe that she would succeed. Mrs. Fields believes and perhaps proved that: “The American dream is true. It works and is possible for everybody. Even the word ‘impossible’ says ‘I'm possible.’”

Thank you, Mrs. Fields, for helping us all get “orientated.”
